

Think beyond legal borders!

www.cr-international.com

IT-law practitioners around the world have the advantage that new technologies do not only challenge the law in only one jurisdiction. To help their clients, they find it useful to see how legal challenges are met in other jurisdictions. Computer Law Review International (CRi) explains cutting edge IT law developments at national and international level to serve as a source of inspiration and a valuable tool for IT-law practitioners.

As a peer reviewed journal, CRi explains and analyses state-of-the-art approaches and solutions to global IT-law challenges in their international context. An international network of reputable correspondents supports CRi in finding top quality submissions by talented authors. Every second month CRi features Articles with comparative as well as in depth analysis, landmark Case Law from jurisdictions and Updates on legislative and other developments all of which have landmark quality.

Subscribe now to Computer Law Review International (CRi) and secure the advantages of legal comparison for your practice: state-of-the-art approaches and solutions from other jurisdictions – every second month, six times a year.
